WASHINGTON — Rep. John B. Anderson of Rockford planned to introduce legislation today to create a congressional committee to oversee all U.S. foreign intelligence operations.

Anderson, in a House speech Monday, said the Central Intelligence Agency never was intended to be a policy-making organization. Anderson's speech was prompted by two different Monday press accounts on South Viet Nam.

In one, Foreign Aid Administrator David Bell warned that Congress might reduce foreign aid to South Viet Nam unless the government of Ngo Dinh Diem changes its policies.

The other report said the CIA had decided to continue its "under-the-table" $250,000-a-month payments to support the special forces of Col. Le Quang Tung who is now considered the most powerful military official in South Viet Nam. It was Quang Tung's troops who had been trained and supported by Americans, who led the Aug. 21 raids on Buddhist pagodas.

"The time has come to ask the question of just who is making foreign policy within the executive branch," said Anderson.

Anderson said too many years have elapsed since the Hoover Commission recommended creation of a committee to oversee all government intelligence agencies. He said he was not at all satisfied with the budgetary review of CIA activities which is available to Congress.

"Like any other governmental activity, lack of congressional review results in inefficiency, duplication and waste as well as allowing the pursuit of conflicting policies which may be contrary to national interest," said Anderson.

Despite expected protests from the administration and the CIA, Anderson said Congress should take away some of the freedom they now have "with literally bi-
